1. A rectangular moat surrounding the manor house and offices. It is fed from and drains into the River Cam. west and sides are about 250ft long, north and south sides c 215ft. Width of moat is c 17ft. Bridges over the moat are shown at tl centre of the west arm and on the north arm c 80ft from the northeast corner. Much of the enclosed area is laid out as ornamental gardens. There is a detached pond to the north running parallel with the east arm.

S1. Site visit 1980. There is only a short length of moat (wet) between the south of the house and the river. There is a corresponding dip in the ground on the north side which has been sealed off from the river. Although there is a channel to the river, it is a drainage channel for overflow. The moat is supplied by a high water table.

Description

O1 and 1. 18th century Manor House on site of 16th century mansion. A Georgian house of five bays and three storeys; parapet replaces the larger E shaped late Elizabethan mansion taken down in 18th century (1750).

O2. July 1968. Site visit.

There are no remains of the earlier manor house which was built soon after 1600 and also featured a moat. The present brick house was built in 1745 at which time a small park was added to the west and a formal garden was created.

3. Mid-Georgian house of white brick built on the site of a late 16th century house which was itself probably a replacement for an earlier hall. Two 17th century service wings survive. The house is set within a small park near the church which is bounded by the River Cam on the east and an early 18th century brick wall on the south.

Description

O1. May 1980. Site visit. All Saints' Church, Little Shelford, is probably of pre-conquest origin. Much of the fabric is in a Saxon style. Several pre-Conquest carved stones are built into the South wall and South porch, including the remains of grave-cover. There is also a pre-Conquest window high up in the South wall of the chancel. It is now blocked and visible only on the exterior and may not be in situ. Reused carved stone in the window jambs are probably of 10th century date church was probably built between 1050 - 1100.

O2. Contains a suggested typology for AS carved stones in E Anglia.

6. Ground plan of church annotated by Dr Cyril Hart to indicate the locations of AS carved stones set in external walls of the restorations of c 1879 - 1880.

4. An evaluation of the churchyard N of the church revealed the edge of a modern brick structure and in situ burials. No Anglo-Saxon remains were discovered, suggesting this area was open and used as a burial ground and was not the site of the Saxon church.

5. It is possible that Little Shelford church stands on the site of or within the precinct of the middle Saxon minster church

Description

01 and 1. The nave is indicated as Norman by the round-headed North doorway, but much of the fabric is in Anglo Saxon style. The walls contain many carved stones of Medieval dates. The church was probably built in the 11th - 12th centuries (between 1050 - 1100).

2. Medieval gravestones. (Illustrations with PRC.)

4. Norman one window in the N wall of the nave. Part of a Norman window was found by Rowe in restoring the chancel in 1878 and placed in the chancel S wall. N and S windows are Perpendicular. In the chancel N wall a broad low recess, clearly Early English. S chapel wholly Perpendicular.

5. Brasses: 15th century (c.1410) - Robert de Frevile in armour and wife Clarice, - holding hands; 1410 - Thomas Frevile in armour and wife Margaret, - in widow's dress, - holding hands. c.1480. Priest in academic dress.

7. The upper half of an alabaster figure belonging to this church has recently been removed to the rectory for safety. It appears to represent a female saint. There are a few traces of colour. Another alabaster carving is set in a niche in the S angle of the S chapel, and is a fine, and almost perfect, seated figure of a saint. The following account of their discovery is now preserved among the church documents: "27 July, 1854. - In lowering the floor of the chancel to the level of the old encaustic tiles, an alabaster figure, broken below the waist, face downwards, was discovered about a foot beneath the surface, and about 2 inches below the level of the encaustic tile floor: it lay on the N side of the chancel, close by the W end of the N window." Two days later "a full length figure was found similarly buried, but on the S side of the chancel." For full details see photocopy with PRC. See RN 04732 for AS church.

8. An evaluation of the churchyard N of the church revealed the edge of a modern brick structure and in situ burials.

9. Is built of field stones with stone dressings, and consists of a chancel with N. vestry, a nave with S. chapel and porch and W. tower. Part of the nave N. wall, including a doorway and window, survives from a C12 building, as until the mid C19 a cross wall between the chancel and nave, pierced by a pointed central opening, with two smaller blind side-arches. The chancel was rebuilt or remodelled in the late C13. The vestry, the tower, and the S. porch were added in the early C14, probably by Sir John de Freville (d.1312) and his successors who may also have rebuilt the S. wall of the nave. In the r C15 the nave and tower were partly rebuilt and new five-light, square-headed windows were put into the chancel. Some windows were blocked in 1638, the W. wall of the S. chapel was rebuilt in brick in 1728 and the E. end of the chancel was apparently rebuilt and the E. window replaced in 1760. By the mid C19 the blind archs of the cross wall between nave and chancel had been pierced by square openings and as a result that wall had become insecure. It was taken down during restoration in 1854 and replaced with a large new chancel arch. At the same time a squint between the S. chapel and the chancel was filled in. By 1873 further restoration was necessary, it was undertaken in 1878-9 under the direction of R. R. Rowe. The chancel was largely rebuilt and given new east and south windows, the nave walls were repaired, and the roof: were rebuilt in the style of the old ones. The south doorway was renewed and a new porch built. The tower was restored, also by Rowe, c.1884, and again in 1950 when other repairs were undertaken. In 1742 there survived 16 chancel stalls with canopies and chancel screen painted with the Freville arms and St. George's cross. The screen was removed in 1854 although the rood stair turret survived in 1980. Only the backs of the stalls then remained. The octagonal stone font date from the early C14. There was a three-decker pulpit before 1854, the carved oak pulpit and canopy which survived in 19 dated from 1633. Against the north wall of the chancel, under an elaborate ogee-headed arch, is an effigy of Sir John de Freville. To its W. a slightly earlier arch once covered the tomb of a woman, perhaps his wife Eleanor. There were six before 1961.

Description

1. The Domesday entry of 1086 records the settlement of Scelford ('a ford through a shallow place'). The place name qualifies Shelford for consideration a potential location of the late Saxon Sceldford mint, the workplace of the moneyer Gundibertus during the late 9th to early 10th century.
